Description

Superb proof with medal and nuanced green patina produced by Emmanuel Villanis (1858-1914), titled "Talisman" on the terrace and representing a bohemian dancer. A French sculptor linked to the Art Nouveau movement, Villanis was known for his bronze prints where the traditional neoclassical style meets the elegant lines of Art Nouveau. Prolific creator of sculptures where the representations of the female body are sensual and combine a play of patina highlighting the finesse of the line. Thought to be attractive, mysterious and daring, the Bohemian exerted a fascination on the artist who created several works materializing these free and seductive women. Currently, the artist chooses to represent her wearing a crown on this free hair. With downcast eyes, we recognize her by her
