Description

Empire style chocolate maker, in solid silver, signed by the goldsmith Henri LAPPARRA late 19th century or early 20th century.

Baluster-shaped, this chocolate maker has exemplary simplicity with its sober lines and three water-leaf friezes, one on the lid, one at the start of the round and one on the foot. The small lid where the mousser is placed is hinged, a seed decorated with two palmettes serves as a grip. The hinged lid is extended by the top of the flowing spout. Below, five centimeters high, a concave part from which emerges the pouring spout decorated with a large palmette which joins the frieze and below a fleur de lyse. The main smooth shaft ends with a frieze similar to the other two. The handle is cream colored with noble material decorated with gaudrons and
