magazines of the century including Magasin Pittoresque, Le Monde Illustré and L'Illustration. With Henri Rivière and Félix Bracquemond, he set out to bring up to date the technique of wood engraving, supplanted by lithography at that time. The discovery of the work of the Japanese artist Hokusai in the 1860s is fundamental to understanding his artistic evolution, both technical and aesthetic.

In 1892, he purchased a house in the town of Saint-Jean-de-Monts in Vendée. There he founded the Saint-Jean-de-Monts group with his painter friend Charles Milcendeau. The Vendée, its ocean, its pine forests and especially its picturesque hinterland constitute an inexhaustible source of inspiration for its landscapes studied on the motif as our drawing can attest.
