Description

A sensitive and subtly colored 18th century English portrait of a wife (Hannah Hass) of rector George Henry Hass. The attractive young guardian is depicted half-length in a carved cartouche with her body tilted to the left, her eyes turned away from the viewer, she appears lost in thought. Hannah wears the sumptuous mousse, ruffles and pale shades that show the influence of the rococo style. She wears a pale silver silk dress with a loose pleated back of the French "Saque-back" style. Also called the "Watteau Pleat" - after the work of the famous Rococo master - the wide fold of fabric falling freely from its shoulders is barely glimpsed. The lace just seen cascading from her cuff is called "engaged" and her gathered sleeves held in place by pearl drops. Her raven hair is curled and worn elegantly
