or varnish in the style of Chinese lacquer. It seems that his reputation grew around the 1770s, and cabinetmakers like Louis Moreau and Gérard Périé, as well as upholsterers, placed orders with him. His marquetry is particularly renowned, so much so that in 1772, while continuing his activity as a cabinetmaker, he opened his own sales store on rue Fromenteau, in the Palais-Royal district.

The furniture bearing his mark attests to the finesse of his taste. Almost all of them are distinguished by their beautiful lines, harmonious proportions and light, lively appearance. Given that he used his stamp as a trademark rather than a brand name, his signature is never insignificant, due to the competence that guided him in his purchases and the pride he attached to the reputation of his house. Louis XV pieces are likely to be in his hand, while Louis XVI pieces are often the work of other cabinetmakers, sometimes working to his specifications, which he then resold. His furniture is particularly sought-after.
