Description

Large terracotta fountain with typical decor from the 1915/20s attribué à Ezio CECCARELI non signée.

In good condition, this fountain comes from an entrance to a private mansion.

The mythological decoration is composed of a young woman draped with a crown of wheat carrying a jug of water and a triton's head spitting water into a cornucopia.

An undeniable symbol of autumn, the wreath of wheat dates back to the harvests of ancient times

The cornucopia is a mythological object representing the shell of a newt used by Pluto, the Roman god of wealth and abundance.

The fountain is in good condition, no old restoration, no large chips or shocks.
