Description

A stained glass window depicting Saint Jerome in his office. The stained glass window was made in the Netherlands in the 17th century. The glass has the dimensions of 16 x 14.5 cm. Hieronymus of Stridon (Stridon ca. 347 - Bethlehem September 30, 420) was an early Christian writer, translator and hermit. In Christianity, he is often considered a doctor of the Church, a father of the Church and a saint. The Roman Catholic Church counts him among the four great fathers of the Western Church. Between 390 and 405, he made a translation of the Bible into current Latin (sermo humilis): the Vulgate. His feast day is September 30 in the Catholic Church and June 15 in the Orthodox Church.
