Description

Venetian bedside table, second half of the 1700s in walnut wood, finished on all four sides. The upper surface has a small border on three sides to prevent objects placed on it from falling. This edge is covered with walnut plating to hide the head of the wood of the sides and back. The door opens to the left and the internal compartment was divided by a small central shelf. Originally it was probably a single space. High, arched legs held together by wavy sides and crosspieces. Restored and shellac polished internally and externally.
