He loves Paris very much, which he paints a lot.
He began to paint everyday life in Paris at that time,
the squares and boulevards, such as the 'Boulevard de l'Opéra' and 'Les Champs Elysées'.

His work is very architecturally precise and he also paints many characters living and working in the city.

Several paintings by Léon Zeytline are preserved in the Carnavalet museums in Paris, Hamburg and Mulhouse.

The painting and the carved and lacquered wooden frame, called Montparnasse, have been restored.

This oil painting on wood has an original carved wooden frame from the early 20th century, coeval with the work.
