Description

This small scepter is a rare object of curiosity from Tibet. The vajra - the element forming the end surmounting the silver sheath - meaning "diamond" and "lightning", is an important symbol and a ritual instrument in Hinduism and especially in the Vajrayana Buddhist tradition ("way of the diamond" ) to which he gave his name, as well as in the bön (three distinct Tibetan religious traditions).

The Makara, the dragon-headed creature, is an aquatic animal from the mythological bestiary of India. He has an elephant's trunk, crocodile teeth and a fish's tail. This creature is associated with fertility and is found in different forms in India and Southeast Asia. This item has been lightly
