Description

View of a garden pavilion in Montmartre in Paris by Maurice Utrillo (1883-1955). Jacomet process. Taken from a work on the remarkable places and monuments of Montmartre. The Jacomet process, named after its inventor, is a printing technique which uses different stencils for each color and which really gives the impression of authentic gouache through its material effects. Each print is indeed unique. The monument is still visible today in Montmartre. Signed lower right. Print and frame in very good condition.
