"Raingo Frères" gilded bronze clock Early 19th century Louis thread Revision made on its movement Works perfectly The Ringo brothers are quickly noticed by their bronzes. In fact, the Raingo brothers, first known as watchmakers, added artistic and furniture bronzes to their catalog. From 1860, Maison Raingo created remarkable pieces for the Emperor and Empress Eugénie, a collection which can be admired today at the Louvre. The Raingo brothers carried out productions based on the Antique then, later, produced small models of the works of contemporary artists such as Pradier, Carrier-Belleuse or Auguste Moreau. They also work in collaboration with the famous cabinetmaker François Linke. The house was presented at the 1862 Universal Exhibition in
