des Beaux-Arts in Paris before returning to his native region. Professor of drawing and Decorative Arts at the School of Fine Arts in Marseille, a position he held until 194, Poggioli never denied his Corsican origins (he painted his island with passion) nor his participation in the Proletarian Artists movement (Art et Travail, Maison de la Culture de Marseille in 1936). Indeed, Vice-President of the Union of Artists of Provence, he continued to take an active part in the professional life of visual artists and in the organization of various Salons. As for his paintings, poetry and delicacy are the mark of a refined artist. The Cantini Museum in Marseille preserves "the Maquis and the sea"
