Description

Bouquet of red flowers in a Provencal pot by the artist Pierre Hodé (1889-1942). Originally from Rouen, he was encouraged by Robert Antoine Pichon. Reformed during the First World War, he settled in Paris at the Bateau-lavoir with Pierre Dumont and frequented the main players in Cubism. His first submission to the Salon d'Automne in 1919 was in the Cubist vein. He was gassed during his voluntary engagement as a stretcher bearer at the front in 1917, the after-effects of which he suffered for the rest of his life. In 1931, he specialized in theater decor at the instigation of Georges Dorival. In 1937, Robert Delaunay asked him to participate in the Universal Exhibition for two frescoes on the railway, he returned to painting only to die as a result of his exposure to gases in 1917 in 1942.
