Description

Interesting reduction staircase with double symmetrical evolution, made of cherry wood from the first quarter of the 20th century, with stringers and rest landings turning outwards. This staircase unfolds harmoniously on either side, supported by a pair of arcuate buttresses under the stringers. The first three overflow steps are distinguished by their rounded section, while the last step before the first landing has a concave section, demonstrating great attention to detail. The openwork balustrade, with its sculpted legs, rests on a base worked in "Pointe de Hungary" style parquet marquetry, highlighted by a molding around the base, the whole rests on four small feet. This type of creation called "relaxation" is often the work of practicing carpenters, seeking to present their work through a reduction that highlights their dexterity and knowledge. To differentiate relaxation and mastery: we will talk about masterpieces of mastery from the 17th/18th century in the same lineage, much more refined pieces, perfected in the quest for excellence, apprentice master journeymen at the end of their training contract. rental, will present their model in front of their peers. These perfected models were used to demonstrate their creativity and technical mastery, in the hope of being dubbed, recognized as masters before the association of master craftsmen, to be able to change their social status and do business and open a business themselves. . shop. These pieces are also a true testimony of know-how and manual intelligence, where the union of the mind and the hand allows the raw material to be transformed into an object, or even a work of art. An exceptional work which perfectly illustrates the Companion's adage: "The hand nourishes the thought, and the thought nourishes the hand". This staircase is perfect for integrating a collection, a cabinet of curiosities or for a surprising and unusual decoration, or even as a showcase in a business, a boutique....
