Description

Original terracotta model, mid-19th century, representing Napoleon I standing guard, having found during his patrol a young recruit dozing, he took his rifle and replaced it himself. We see the recruit wake up, distraught to see that it was the emperor who was at his post. The sculpture, unsigned, is nervous, the rendering is excellent, we must be able to restore its author. The underside bears an old exhibition or collection label. The base bears the title "HIM", he is recognizable among all...
