revolt in the canton of Uri against the Austrian oppressor. I know of only three Flemish or Dutch 17th century paintings representing this rare theme of William Tell shooting an arrow at an apple on his son's head: two by Joos de Momper II and our painting. In all three versions the boy has turned his back to his father. David Colijns was born in Rotterdam but he spent his complete career in the Dutch metropolis of Amsterdam. Many 17th century painters used different spellings for their proper name. Colijns used "Colijns", "Colyns", "Colijn" and "Celijns".
