Description

A beautiful black powder rifle juxtaposed with a damascus barrel manufactured by J.Jamain in Liège. The stock is made of Junglans, a type of dark walnut combined with steel applications. The trigger guard, cocks, chamber exterior, and lever are hand-engraved steel with a beautiful tight pattern. The side-by-side barrel is forged from Damascus steel, a slightly incorrect term and often referred to as "watered steel". It consists of a steel core onto which layers of steel have been twisted. Then the barrels were engraved with a fine brown finish. The walnut stock carries a silver-inlaid shield which bears the owner's initials. In this case, always empty.

Mechanism: The shotgun features a pin-firing system that was commonly used in the mid and
