Description

Magnificent large terracotta group representing a man-woman couple holding each other. This is a sculpture by Jean Louis Grégoire based on the bronze original that he exhibited at the Salon of 1882. This sculpture is titled "The Engagement Ring" in Grégoire's repertoire. We see a 16th century couple dressed in Renaissance fashion with strawberry collars. The man is leaning slightly towards the woman and seems to be presenting something to her with his hands. The details are very fine and precise. This group is very decorative in several ways. Indeed, the unusual subject and the almost perfect execution of this sculpture, but also the large size (67.5 cm high) give it an important decorative appeal. It appears to be a terracotta production from the Sèvres factory (the plaque is no longer there).
