Description

This French pendulum clock described is a fine and striking piece. Its elegant and refined design recalls the 19th century era and the taste for orientalism. The silver-plated bronze base offers a luxurious look, while the mercury-gilt bronze details add a touch of sophistication. The figure of the woman in oriental clothing sitting on a sofa adds a note of charm and exoticism. This decorative element recalls the era's interest in oriental culture, which is often reflected in the art and design of the time. Despite the aesthetic appeal, the watch has no alarm, making it ideal for those who prefer a quiet environment without noise disturbances. Weekly charging ensures smooth operation and reduces the need for continuous charging. The silk thread suspension is a feature that increases the quality of the pendulum. Silk, known for its strength and flexibility, ensures precise and fluid movement. The clock was built by J. Charles, a renowned clockmaker from Paris, in the first half of the 19th century (ca. 1840). This clock is undoubtedly an ideal complement to luxury furnishings and represents a long-lasting investment over time.
