leaders for a large number of "official" painters of the 19th century. At the Académie Julian, he became friends with Numa Gillet and Michel Korochansky, who took him to Montigny. There everything enchants him, the forest, the banks of the Loing, the meadows, the farm animals, the canal, and he abandons Paris for Sorques. He moved to the Coffin café which took in boarders, tourists or passing artists. Ede stayed for seven years, finding himself at ease in this warm environment of artists with such varied conceptions, a true melting pot of modern art.
