vocation as a painter. This did not, however, prevent Jérôme-Martin Langlois from entering the workshop of Jacques-Louis David. He was commissioned by his master to make an unsigned copy of the assassinated Marat and he replaced Jean-Pierre Franque as assistant on the painting of the Sabines. First prize in Rome in 1809 with Priam at the feet of Achilles, he exhibited at the Painting Salon in 1805. Close to David, he was the last to paint his portrait when the latter was in exile in Brussels. In 1838, shortly before his death, he was named a member of the Institute. Highly rated artist on ArtPrice.  Amédée Jérôme Langlois was a naval officer, journalist and member of the Workers' International (1819-1902). He is the son of the painter Jérôme-Martin Langlois. He was elected to the Chamber of Deputies from 1871 to 1876 in Seine, and from 1876 to 1885 in Seine-et-Oise. He is one of the 363 opponents of de Broglie's ministry.
