Description

Marble Torso representing a man in the manner of fragmentary statues from the Antiques, end of the 19th century, beginning of the 20th century.

Interesting bust of a headless man in white marble in the style of ancient sculptures of Greco-Roman antiquity.

a fragment, a bust of a headless man nicely sculpted with beautiful movement.

probably an Italian work difficult to date precisely, perhaps a souvenir of the grand tour. mounted on a red marble base using large metal rods in the 20th century.

the whole is stable and very decorative.

Even though it is a fragment it is already of beautiful proportion and extremely decorative.
