in Faubourg St Antoine in Paris. Louis XIV was enthusiastic about the work of the glass art of Jean-Baptiste Mazzolay through the mirrors of the Hall of Mirrors at Versailles, ennobled him and gave him his letters patent in 1666. After a visit to Rizaucourt, Jean-Baptiste Mazzolay lit the first fixed furnace of the Royal Manufacture in crystals in Bayel under the aegis of the Clairvaux Abbey. The Royal Manufacture of Bayel was the official supplier to the court until 1727. Different successors took over the management of this Manufacture, the Valéry families 1771-1852. Marquot 1854-1987. Since 1987 the French crystal company, the Borgelesia holding, the heirs Martini and Rossi and the last the financier Saint Germain (Haviland and Daum holding). The factory closes on May 13, 2016.
