Pierre-Gaston Rigaud (1874 - 1939) is a French post-impressionist painter. After having been a student at the School of Fine Arts in Bordeaux, he was a student at the Beaux-Arts in Paris in 1895 (Atelier Bonnat, Gustave Moreau and Albert Marignan). He exhibits at the Salon des artistes français. After creating landscape paintings (Basque Country, Corsica, Arcachon Basin), he devoted himself almost exclusively to cathedrals and their stained glass windows. This is how he is known as the "man of cathedrals". He exhibits in Paris, Georges Petit Charpentier gallery and in the provinces. A certain number of French museums, generally in the provinces, have acquired his works: Nantes, Angoulême, Troyes, Mulhouse, etc. He obtained a gold medal at the Colonial Exhibition of 1931, another at the exhibition of 1937 for a large decorative composition on the Bordeaux region. He is the father of Jean Rigaud (1912 - 1999), official painter of the Navy.
