Description

Italian School, 19th century After Titian (Tiziano Vecellio, 1488/90-1576) "The Three Ages of Man" -- left panel Oil on canvas 19th-century copy after the left portion of Titian's famous composition (c. 1512-1514, National Galleries of Scotland, Edinburgh), depicting the couple of musician lovers in an Arcadian landscape. A very fine copy, rendering with remarkable skill the golden light, the softness of the flesh tones, and the poetic atmosphere characteristic of the Venetian school. Several early copies and variations of this subject are recorded in public collections, notably at the Galleria Doria Pamphilj (Rome) and the Warrington Museum & Art Gallery (UK). Our work clearly belongs to a well-established tradition of copies and reworkings after Titian, found in museums
