Description

Matching the plates previously put on sale, a splendid compotier with a raised and scrolled edge. Decorated with flowers on stems probably multi-colored dahlia flowers and smaller scattered bouquets. As if in suspension, a different flower or in a different position animates the pool. The wing covered with shells and foliage in relief, typical of the Art Nouveau period, is richly outlined with gold brushwork on the edge. An abundant floral decoration whose main bouquet measures nearly 14 cm develops following the curve of the marli and is organized according to a ternary rhythm already experimented by several large manufacturers a few years previously (see the famous Rousseau Service). In addition to the flowers, the wing is decorated with shells, acanthus leaves and foliage in pronounced relief.
