primarily in Buenos Aires, always with extraordinary success.In 1926, the National Commission of Fine Arts of Argentina acquired the work entitled "Calle de aldea." In 1947, he visited Tandil, in the province of Buenos Aires, and years later settled there, eventually landing in Mendoza, where he ended his life.Notes on the artist from the book "A Century of Painting in the Basque Country," by Alexandre Hurel and Michel de Jaureguiberry:"Cabanas Oteiza specialized in painting Basque farmhouses, as well as producing Basque-style portraits, with their own distinct personality and a familiar touch that makes them sensitive and deeply human."
