Description

A fairly unusual inkwell, not only is it from the art deco period but it was designed in a marble that is quite rare and spectacular today: portor. entirely typical of the cubist forms specific to this period, it is a rather luxurious inkwell comprising a pen holder and two cubic containers with their original bronze containers and two small glass verrines, one of which is damaged .

Portor marble is of great beauty with large gold-colored veins on a deep black.

the contrast is superb.

no shock or impact to report.

an inkwell from the 1930s made from a material that has become quite rare.
