Description

Tom Dixon, born in Tunisia in 1959, is an internationally recognized British designer. He began his studies at Chelsea College of Art and Design but dropped out before graduating. What follows is a most atypical journey. He becomes a guitarist in a rock band and works in a nightclub at night. During the day, he learned welding in a garage. His career began with the creation of furniture and sculptures from recycled metal that he recovered from the port of Chelsea. Twenty years later, he became artistic director of the Habitat firm, and embodies the success of a self-made man. In the meantime, his S-chair has made him a recognized designer. At the head of his own firm, he creates objects in a neo-industrial spirit which reflects his taste for raw materials and craftsmanship. His creations
