Description

Clock in Mazy Black Marble from Belgium on a stepped base highlighted with fine brass moldings. The round white enameled dial is graduated with Roman numeral hours. This clock has a wire movement accompanied by a pendulum. The upper part presents a bronze sculpture with a brown patina. At a time when the study of music occupied a preponderant place in the education and instruction of children from noble families, this work represents a young adolescent playing the transverse flute. The child is seated on a rock surrounded by vegetation, he holds a transverse flute in his mouth. This discreet and charming clock will appeal to music lovers and art enthusiasts.  Period: Late 19th Century Excellent condition. Complete movement, supplied with key. May require
