Description

Gabon, Fang people, 1950s/1960s, elegant little figure of a reliquary guardian "Eyema Byeri" in wood with a dark patina representing a standing female character, legs half-bent, hands clasped at the level of the plexus holding a container. This sculpture of general elegance stands out by the sculptor's emphasis on the musculature of the character and the intensity of the facial expression, emphasizing the role of guardian that this figure must have had.

Height 24.5 cm. The scale indicator in the last photograph is a small model of a lighter from a brand known to everyone.
