Paul-Charles continued manufacturing, taking the name "Veuve Sormani & fils". The Sormani house was again rewarded at the Universal Exhibition of 1878 and that of 1892, as well as at the 1883 colonial exhibition. In 1914, the Sormani house joined forces with the Thiebaud Frères house to become Thiebaud-Sormani. She exhibited under this name in 1925 during the International Exhibition of Modern Decorative and Industrial Arts. In 1934, the death of Paul-Charles Sormani led the house to close permanently. The Sormani house is known for having manufactured furniture but also shelf objects such as jewelry boxes or even liqueur cellars...
