specialized in crystals and gilded bronze, like the toilet of the Duchess of Berry, now kept in Paris, at the Louvre Museum. Sole owner of the store upon the death of her brother in 1815, the widow Désarnaud continued to make her business prosper, thus obtaining a princely clientele and the title of Supplier of the King's Crystals. In 1819, she won the gold medal for crystals adorned with gilded bronze at the Exhibition of Industrial Products of 1819. After making her fortune, she sold her business to Jacques Boin in 1829. Probably one of the greatest furniture houses of the 19th century, it can be considered as the heir of the Merchants Merciers of the 18th century Literature: Annick and Didier MASSEAU, L'Escalier de Cristal, luxury in Paris 1809-1923, edition Monelle Hayot Rapport Condition: A few small chips, some wear to the decor but the general very freshness of the decor.
