Description

India, 19th century, very beautiful and unusual bronze hanging altar dedicated to the elephant goddess Lakshmi also called Gajalakshmi, wife of Vishnu, goddess of happiness, prosperity, wealth and abundance. Lakshmi, seated in the lotus position, is surrounded by two elephants who bathe her with water from their trunks. This iconography, which appears very early (6th century BC), is visible on very old Indian temples, coins, etc. Good state of conservation except for slight normal wear in relation to the age and without impact on aesthetics. Height 8.6 cm. Width 7 cm. The scale indicator in the last photograph is a small model of a lighter from a brand known to everyone. We take particular care with our packaging by using optimum protection. The shipment is made with insurance included.
