Description

Elegant cornered display case in walnut wood. The display case is divided into two distinctive sections: the lower part has a closed door, while the upper part has a glass door. The piece of furniture is characterized by pillars decorated with extremely refined twisted columns.

One of the most evocative elements of this showcase are the finely crafted wooden grates that decorate both the front and the sides. These grates imitate the style of iron grates typical of the time. Despite the passage of time, the display case still retains its original patina, testimony to its historical value and the attention that has been dedicated to its conservation; small portions of the grates are missing.
