Description

Live study of a dog (Weimaraner) by the animal sculptor Marcel Lemar (1892-1941). A postman at the age of 15, it was the war of 1914 in which he participated until 1917, which triggered his vocation as a sculptor. In 1925, he took anatomy lessons at the National Museum of Natural History and exhibited at the Salon des Indépendants for the first time. He quickly joined the XII group, created by Jane Poupelet and François Pompon, and participated in the group's two exhibitions, the first in spring 1932 in the salons of the Ruhlmann hotel, the second in March 1933. He regularly participated in exhibitions independent, autumn, national or animal artists. His visits to the plant garden give rise to quick sketches like ours where he captures from life the natural attitudes of rare animals
