Description

Rare chiseled bronze and patinated bronze clock from the end of the 18th century in the shape of a covered vase in which the dial is inscribed.

Capped with a gilded bronze lid decorated with a frieze of laurel leaves and a pine cone grip, the vase rises on four thin, long twisted stems ending in goat's hooves. The heads of fauns, on either side, simulate the coves. A finely chiseled snake with an arrowhead tongue decorates the front of the patinated bronze base.

It is accompanied, on each side, by a leonine head. Counter-base in gilded bronze set with a delicately fluted ring. The whole rests on four rafe feet.

In ancient Greece, the snake was the protective animal of the house. This position developed its
