theory, by three consuls. It was actually headed by the First Consul, Napoleon Bonaparte, who became consul for life in 1802. The Consulate followed the Directoire regime (1795-1799) and lasted until the end of the First French Republic. Nicolas-Guy-Antoine Brenet (1770 or 1773 -1846) is a French medalist. Son and student of Nicolas Guy Brenet, Nicolas-Guy-Antoine Brenet learned medal engraving under the direction of Nicolas-Marie Gatteaux. He is the author of the print, drawn and engraved with etching and burin, entitled Allegory of the federative pact of the armed nation for freedom and the constitution in Paris on July 14, 1790, which was engraved as a medal by Cakes. We owe him, in addition to certain common silver coins including the imperial bust portrait of Napoleon, a large quantity of medals commemorating historical events that occurred under the Empire, the Restoration and the July Monarchy.
