Paris: brilliant studies, he distinguished himself by his intelligence, his appetite for knowledge and his intense faith. Having finally given up the priesthood, he followed a career without brilliance. Brilliant painter and talented writer, he sold some paintings during his lifetime, but to feed his large family, he had to accept a small post of scratch in a company, employment which led him from Concarneau to Nantes, then in Bordeaux where he died in 1951, overturned by a car crossing the street.
