Description

Jean-Baptiste II Tuart is the son of Jean-Bapstiste I Tuart, one of the cabinetmakers supplying the Court under Louis XV. Trained by his father with whom he worked for a time, he then became independent to establish himself as a master tablet maker and merchant.

Elegant small chest of drawers with central projection in herringbone rosewood marquetry in rosewood frames separated by Greek-style strips of light wood.

Beautiful ornamentation of gilded and chiseled bronze, red Flanders marble top.

Opening two drawers without crosspiece.
