Expressionism and European avant-garde movements, he developed a personal style that is instantly recognizable.

Standing Nudes is a watercolor that perfectly illustrates this fusion of rigor and spontaneity. The composition features two female figures, depicted with a rich and varied color palette. The dynamic brushstrokes and bold pencil lines give the bodies a vitality and almost tangible presence. The vivid colors and contrasting shadows create a subtle interplay of light that adds depth and volume to the forms.

This work demonstrates Ten Hoope's interest in the human body, a recurring theme in his oeuvre. The use of watercolor, a demanding technique, showcases his dexterity and keen sense of color and transparency. The figures, though stylized, retain a certain sensuality and expressiveness characteristic of the artist's style.

Standing Nudes also reflects the influences of his contemporaries while asserting a distinct artistic identity. Through this work, Ten Hoopen invites the viewer to a contemplation that is both aesthetic and emotional, highlighting the beauty and complexity of the human form.
