Description

French school from the end of the 19th century.
Putto inflicting an electric shock on his fellow creature. Oil on cardboard, mounted on canvas.
This painting with a subject as rare as it is curious illustrates the use of the famous Van Narum machine with a Leyden bottle can be understood as an amusing allegory of electricity 24 x 30 cm.
At the end of the 19th century this principle was taken up by fairgrounds to make an attraction called the Electrifier which, by gradually increasing the voltage, allowed competitions of courage.
