Description

Architectural portal sculpture made of solid teak with original green-turquoise coloring, India, last third of the 18th century.As the name suggests, the object originates from an architectural element, probably a door, an entrance portal and has a monumental character.The expressive carving of a curved, ribbed central section, scales and floral eldements wrap around this central section. The traces of ageing on the wood and the paint finish create a striking impression.The object has a very decorative character and appears lively andstrong.The formerly installed back is natural teak wood and slightly flatter in the carving heights and depths.The object is firmly mounted on a black iron stand (14x14x0.7cm)
