Description

This large Arita porcelain vase from the Meiji era is a remarkable example of 19th century Japanese craftsmanship. It has a broad body and a wide collar flaring slightly upwards, typical of the Arita style. The dominant color is a bright orange, which highlights the detailed floral designs and adds a touch of sparkle. Panels adorned with precisely painted scenes depict natural landscapes, traditional architecture and mountain backgrounds. The borders around the panels are decorated with geometric patterns with flowers and dragons, contrasted by a light blue color. This vase is not only a valuable collector's item, but also a representation of Japanese history and culture. It reflects the expertise and finesse of the craftsmen of the Meiji period.  Period: Late 19th Century Excellent condition. Delivery
