Description

painting, signed lower right by E. Dupuis and dated 1898, captures a scene of peaceful rural life, typical of the late 19th century. It depicts a small traditional thatched house surrounded by a rolling green landscape. At the center of the composition, a farmer's wife stands at the entrance to the house, embodying the simplicity and serenity of agricultural life. The painting is distinguished by its subtle use of light and soft colors, evoking a beautiful spring or summer day. The presence of the farmer's wife, modest but central, brings a human dimension to the scene, emphasizing the intimate connection between man and nature at that time. She embodies the resilience and dedication of country people, while bringing warmth and life to the landscape. This work, signed and dated lower right, perfectly
