designs like the TWA terminal at JFK Airport and the Gateway Arch in St. Louis, as well as for his sleek, futuristic furniture designs.

The Tulip table, one of his most famous creations, perfectly embodies his design philosophy.
Published by Knoll, this table is distinguished by its single pedestal base, designed to eliminate the mess of traditional table legs. The model presented here is an oval edition with a white arabescato marble top veined with gray, measuring approximately 78 inches by 47 inches. The base is made of aluminum coated with white Rilsan, a durable plastic material, and the table is signed under the base, ensuring its authenticity.

Knoll, the publisher of this piece, is an American company founded in 1938 by Hans and Florence Knoll. The company is renowned for its collaborations with prominent modern designers and its commitment to producing furniture that combines functionality with aesthetics. Knoll has played a pivotal role in popularizing modern design in the United States and around the world, and Eero Saarinen;s Tulip table remains one of their most iconic pieces. This table encapsulates Saarinen;s vision of simplified, organic aesthetics, uniting form and function in a timeless design.
