Henri mathieu studied at the École Boulle in Paris and began his career in design working for furniture manufacturers. He quickly gained a reputation for his innovative and functional approach to design. Mathieu worked for many renowned companies, including Air France, for which he designed the uniforms of the cabin crew, as well as the interiors of some aircraft. He also worked for the French national railway company (SNCF) and designed seats for trains. Mathieu was particularly known for his work in the field of lighting. He created luminaires for public and private spaces, as well as for
