Description

Large French triptych from the mid-1800s in bronze-like metal. The central element of the triptych is a clock adorned with an imposing lighthouse, symbolizing guidance and protection, accompanied by the figure of a sailor in uniform, representing courage and seafaring life. The clock's base is made of fine marble, giving the piece both solidity and elegance. On either side of the clock, two large metal vases, also finely crafted, display maritime motifs: anchors and sailing ships decorate their surfaces, evoking the spirit of adventure and maritime exploration. This triptych, with its refined aesthetics and intricate details, embodies the seafaring spirit of the 19th century, combining French craftsmanship with nautical iconography.
