Description

This Murano glass Sommerso vase, created by Flavio Poli for Seguso in the 1960s, is much more than a decorative object; it is a true work of art that embodies refinement, technical innovation and craftsmanship. Known for its wavy and sinuous design, this medium-sized vase features a thick glass structure, where a central green hue delicately blends with transparent edges, creating a shaded effect characteristic of the sommerso technique. Sommerso, literally "submerged" in Italian, is a complex glass-making technique in which successive layers of glass of different colors are superimposed to produce surprising visual effects. Flavio Poli, a great master of this technique, has sublimated this process in this vase by harmoniously blending shades of green with clear parts. This mixture of shades and consistencies creates a play of transparencies and reflections that vary depending on the light and the viewing angle, giving a different nuance at every moment. The design of this vase echoes the mid-century aesthetic, a time when Murano was at the height of its global fame for artistic glass production. The dynamic interaction of the glass with light amplifies the different shades of green, creating an almost hypnotic visual experience. As a decorative piece, this vase is extremely versatile. It can be used to adorn a bookshelf, add a touch of understated elegance to the dining room table, or become the centerpiece of a sophisticated living room. Even without a mark or signature, the exceptional quality of the glass and the perfectly executed design clearly point to the hand of Flavio Poli and the Seguso workshop. The intricacy of the design, combined with the impeccable execution, is a testament to the craftsmanship and technical innovation that characterized Murano glass art of this era. Owning such a vase means not only enriching your environment with a beautiful decorative piece, but also appropriating a part of the fascinating history of glass art. This vase, with its timeless design and masterful technical execution, is an enduring tribute to Murano craftsmanship and artistic excellence and a delicate and distinctive addition to any interior, arousing admiration and conversation among those who have the pleasure of contemplating it.
